—When the "One Hundred Wives" was given in Chicago, the Times said: "One Hundred Wives," in the legitimate use of the term, is a vigorous drama; the master key is boldly sounded in the very first passage, and every succeeding note swells with an added meaning the powers of its theme. The Insurance Tax.

We publish below the amount of premiums received by the several insurance agents doing business in this city, for the year 1881, upon which they pay a tax to the fire department. This includes all losses on premiums received on insured property within the corporate limits of the city, and is a tax of two per cent on that amount. These figures show a slight increase over that of last year, but is about on an average for the past ten or twelve years:

Street & McLean.	Premiums.	Tax.
George Dehl.	164 42	3 28
Simon Strauss.	892 00	17 84
Clark & Hoyt.	244 88	4 89
John G. Sayre.	2,623 97	52 47
Mark Ripley.	5,362 50	107 25
Dunock & Hayner.	16,399 50	327 99
	$25,307 77	$519 00

The premiums received foot up $25,307.77, and the loss by fire of insured property for the same time, foot up $42,400, showing that the insurance companies left more money in Janesville than they have taken away, which cannot be said of years in the past, as Janesville suffered during the past year the loss of [Notobolm's] flouring mill, upon which there was an insurance of $15,000, and also the Monterey Woolen Mills, insured loss of 18,000. Carns Bros. $5,800, and the warehouses at the railroad depot $4,000. It is very seldom that fires of the above magnitude visit our city. All in all, we take it that there will be no cause for grumbling this year on account of the enormous amount of money the insurance companies are annually taking away from our business men.

—McCartney, 88 Lloyd street, Buffalo, N. Y., fell and sprained his ankle. His employer, H. Anderson, 94 Main Street, procured some THOMAS ELECTRIC OIL, and he says that a few applications enabled him to walk as usual. Sold by A. J. Roberts and F. Sherer & Co.

The Greatest Musical Event of the Season.

The rarest musical feast served for the people of Janesville for many months, will be that of the Carreno-Donaldi concert company to-morrow night. Their company is made up of some of the finest artists on the concert stage in this country. When their company gave a concert in Boston on the 23d of last October, the Daily Globe said:

The attendance was large, and certainly all present must have felt more than repaid for going. Mrs. Teresa Carreno opened the program with Liszt's "Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 2," and was received with marked favor. Signor Roberto Stantini and Signor Pietro Ferranti were also received with great favor. Of course, the feature of the evening was the singing of the world-renowned Donaldi, whose hold on the hearts of the Boston public grows firmer and firmer on her every visit to the Athens of America. The audience seemed determined, last evening to keep her constantly singing, and applauded accordingly. In fact, a majority of all the numbers on the programme were encored. The Carreno-Donaldi will ever receive a warm welcome here.

A Young Man Ends His Life by Taking Laudanum.

The Johnstown stage brought news to the Gazette office to-day that Roma Locke, son of Harvey Locke, of the town of Richmond, committed suicide last night by taking a large dose of laudanum. He was about 21 years of age. No cause is assigned for this determination to commit self-destruction.

A Janesvillian Searches in Maine for Prohibitory Results.

JANESVILLE, Feb. 4.—A few days since your paper published a paragraph based upon information communicated to the editor by the writer to the effect that the observations of the latter while on a short tour through Maine, convinced him that the prohibitory law in that State fell far short of accomplishing the purposes for which it was enacted. A very highly esteemed lady, in the Gazette of yesterday, takes exception to this conclusion and furnishes some figures copied from a religious paper published far distant from the State of Maine, to show the thorough efficiency of the law.

It must be conceded, that of all persons, those most totally incompetent to examine the practical operation of such a law, would be a lady who can have but the slightest knowledge of such matters from the very nature of things, and a clergyman whose associations and inclinations would keep him far aloof from those places where actual valuable knowledge could be obtained. Hence any information coming from such sources, would be viewed as liable to be extremely erroneous by one who spent several days in Maine, and never failed to find that a respectable address accompanied by the necessary shekels, would secure all of the spiritual fluids that he might imagine himself in need of.

The writer will say for himself that he is a total abstainer from intoxicating beverages, and that he took some pains to learn the facts as to the working of prohibition in Maine, solely for the purpose of having an intelligent understanding of the matter. His observations confirmed his belief in the impracticability of a system of, coercive morality and established him in the only principle consistent with human liberty, that within certain limits, every person must be allowed the exercise of his own judgment.

Concerning this question statistics must be inevitably misleading. Arrests for crime may be much greater in one year under a cheap license, than the next year under a stringent prohibitory enactment, and yet they may be not at all the result of the laxity of restraint. Other conditions and circumstances may materially affect society so that such a consideration would be almost completely obscured. It is but a few years since our country suffered from a panic. The entire population endured great hardships from the reverses of fortune. Disasters, disaster and despondency held high carnival in thousands of households. Who does not recognize the tendency in the human mind to resort, in times of such depression and discouragement, when the present is without hope and the future is black with despair, to artificial means to buoy up the spirits, and extract some happiness, however illusory and transitory, from existence? In such seasons, there is much excessive indulgence, and it is entirely removed from any law which may be on the statute book. Now, however, business is flourishing, men are employed, labor is rewarded, general content and prosperity prevail; and there is less drunkenness in Maine and elsewhere. But the result is entirely independent of legal provisions to secure prohibition. Cause and effect are frequently reversed respecting this matter. It is not so generally true that drinking leads to disaster and deprivation as it is that disaster and deprivation lead to intoxication.

While figures are not therefore at all trustworthy in determining the comparative results of prohibitory and license laws there are facts which disclose the absolute utility of all efforts to stop the sale and use of spirituous beverages. The reports of the United States Internal Revenue commissioner show that if the officials of Maine very naturally fail to discover the places where liquor is sold, the national government succeeds in collecting a very respectable sum from that State in the way of licenses. In 1877 four hundred and two retail licenses were issued, and in 1880, eight hundred and twenty—the number having more than doubled in four years, the price being twenty-five dollars each. This would give one license to every 750 inhabitants, or in a city of the size of Janesville about twelve places where liquor could be bought, surely enough for any practical purpose. The editor of a Biddeford paper said, "there are more than 100 rum shops up and down our streets," and in Portland, the home of Neal Dow, the writer was assured that there are more than 75 "club houses" where liquor was furnished. Vermont has a like prohibition law with like effects.

In this connection it may be proper to refer to an experiment tried nearer to our own State. In 1874 Michigan had an exceedingly stringent prohibitory law. In his message to the Legislature, at the beginning of the session of 1875, Governor Bagley said the United States Revenue department reported 6,444 places where liquor was sold, and he estimated that $38,000,000 were spent for beverages in that State during the previous year. He showed the evil and dangerous effects of having a law which the officers would not enforce, and which the people would not regard; and during the same session, the alleged prohibition was superseded by effectual license—which is working satisfactorily. In Wisconsin we have a mild taste of the Maine principle, in the Anti treating law—a law conceived, brought forth and nurtured on demagogism. A few days after this malformation made its appearance in the official paper, the dispenser of justice in a rural district in an obscure corner of our Commonwealth declared it unconstitutional, and since that date the public has gone on treating and being treated without let, hindrance or molestation.
